Security Seminar

SECURE, MONITOR, REACT... OR PAY THE PRICE

"Cybercrime is a growing threat for businesses but many businesses are under-prepared for it. A third of them (companies in the Annual Kroll Global Fraud Report 2013/14) say they don't currently invest in IT security and while companies that are planning to increase investment are focusing on technology, they are neglecting elements such as staff screening and due diligence on partners, clients and vendors. These processes are key to mitigating the insider threat, which often can't be detected by anti-fraud technology or physical security." <http://fraud.kroll.com/>

The perennial problem with security is that the measures taken to prevent any breach of security or fraud are frequently regarded as excessive or overly expensive until they are breached.

From physical security to cybersecurity, the 2015 joint EL/WLA Security Seminar to be held in Stockholm in October 2015 will address potential weaknesses in lottery systems, procedures and processes ranging across the design and security of scratch cards, the testing of complex systems, the resilience of increasingly complex communications systems, electronic "lottery tickets" and the security or lack of security of non-physical (e.g. RNG) draws.

As systems become more "intelligent", the ingenuity of those wishing to subvert those systems will also grow – posing much more sophisticated threats to lottery systems. Management must accept their responsibility to understand the risks and either allocate proportionate resources and budgets ... or pay the price.

Come to Stockholm in October to hear presentations from external security professionals, experts from the lottery supplier companies and, most importantly, from your lottery colleagues - security professionals with years of practical and relevant experience.
